

Congratulations!

Reflecting on her success, Alyssa said:

"I am so thrilled to win the BioArtAttack competition! I was inspired to paint a peacock when I saw the way the light bounced off its textured feathers at Barcelona Zoo last spring. I wanted to share my amazement at this miracle nature created. When biology meets colour, truly great things can happen – and right now, I am feeling as proud as a peacock!"

As part of her prize, Alyssa will receive a special award bundle and has been invited to an experience day at the Royal Veterinary College alongside the other national winners. On Wednesday (this week is National Biology Week), Alyssa was honoured at the Royal Society of Biology's Awards Ceremony, held at the House of Commons.

This remarkable achievement is a testament to Alyssa's talent, creativity and dedication. We are incredibly proud of her success and look forward to celebrating this well-deserved recognition with the St Faith's community.
